Asset management strategy

The OFI Precious Metals fund ended July up 0.03%. After rising in the first half of the month, prices eased towards the very end of the month as concerns over tariffs subsided.

Gold prices stabilised (-0.42% over the month). US President Donald Trump continued to pile pressure on US Central Bank Governor Jerome Powell to cut rates, which would be supportive for gold prices. Having failed in this, the US President's supporters attempted another angle of attack by questioning the amount of renovation work on the Fed's buildings, decided by Jerome Powell. This could be grounds for dismissal, according to them. There was a surreal scene on 25 July with Donald Trump mentioning the subject while the Fed Chairman was at his side... However, the US central bank could still lower its rates in the coming months if economic indicators (particularly the labour market) continue to deteriorate in the United States. Conversely, the tariff agreements reached between the United States and its main trading partners at the end of the month, at levels of 15% to 20%, reassured investors and gave some visibility, despite the uncertainty that has prevailed in recent months.

Palladium and platinum prices proved more volatile. At the beginning of the month, precious metals prices rose on concerns over tariffs. These concerns increased on 9 July when Donald Trump announced that copper imports would be taxed at 50% on 1 August. Investors then began to consider an extension to precious metals. These concerns evaporated at the very end of the month with the US president's announcement on copper tariffs, which will not affect refined metal but only semi-finished products. The $30 premium (just over 2%) which had built up between the US platinum futures market and the London spot price, vanished instantly, accounting for most of the fall in this metal's price over the month (-3.27%). The situation nevertheless remains tense for platinum, with a deficit for the fourth consecutive year and 30% tariffs on South Africa, the main producer of this metal, the impact of which is unclear for the time being.

Palladium prices rose by nearly 9%. Possible sanctions on Russia, one of the leading palladium producers, are worrying investors. The Impala Platinum group also announced the early closure by the end of May 2026 of the Lac des Iles mine in Canada due to low palladium prices. This mine produces about 3% of global production.

July was the perfect illustration of the US president's vacillation. Whatever happens now, it seems clear that the issue of the US budget deficit and debt will be an increasingly insoluble problem. US economic indicators are also starting to deteriorate and could prompt the US central bank to cut interest rates if this is confirmed. This is a strong support factor for precious metals. Once you add in the complex international geopolitical climate, it seems there has never been a better time to diversify into precious metals.
