Asset management strategy

Markets ended the month higher, with the US banking crisis relatively well controlled by regulators and earnings season looking positive. Both earnings and sales were mostly in line with expectations, though the share price reaction will be much more influenced by guidance issued for the rest of the year. While the tone proved more reassuring on the easing of supply chain issues and the beneficial effects of easing commodity prices, the fact remains that the price effects that greatly benefited companies in 2022 will fade this year amid an expected slowdown in demand, though the kind of slowdown sought by central banks is not yet reflected in macroeconomic data, which remains in expansionary territory overall. Europe is still targeting 2% inflation and ECB President Christine Lagarde has stressed the importance of adapting monetary policy to the global warming agenda as part of the "Fit For 55" plan for 2030.

The fund fell sharply in relative terms, down 1.16% in the month, compared with a 2,08% rise in its benchmark. Risk aversion and appetite for quality non-cyclical growth stocks outperformed. Conversely, small and mid caps, such as cyclical stocks in the industrial and basic materials sectors, suffered more. Another key event in the month was the decline in all stocks related to clean energy, including equipment makers such as Nexans in cables, Vestas in wind turbines and, moreover, energy providers like Acciona Energia and Orsted. Only the more integrated and diversified Enel outperformed, gaining 10%. Waga Energy manufactures systems (using a proprietary patented technology) to recover methane emissions from non-hazardous waste sites. Waga announced that, together with Veolia, it had commissioned one of Europe's biggest biomethane production plants to develop a local, sustainable and low-carbon energy source. Its results were in line with expectations, with the company reporting an operating profit in France but higher consolidated losses associated with the cost of setting up and developing teams in North America. Installed capacity is set to reach 800 GWh by end 2023 (vs. 216 GWh in 2022). Despite implementation of its strategy proceeding smoothly, the share price has fallen nearly 30% in the year to date.

In this generally bullish market, technology was the only sector to lose ground in Europe. There were mixed results from ASML (semiconductor equipment manufacturer), which foresees a decline in its order book, while TSMC confirmed its capex plans even as players exposed to the more cyclical PC segment announced that they expected demand to decline in the second quarter. Infineon said the cyclical slowdown would be more moderate than expected, but that it expects a decline in 2024 as inventories normalise, with this slowdown in demand offset by resilient prices and the transition to electric vehicles. The share price fell 12% in the month.

In the interests of caution, we sold some Infineon, ASML, Saint-Gobain, SEB and Alstom and bought Enel, Mowi and Novozymes. Novozymes reported stronger than expected results driven by its bioenergy and agriculture business, with orders up sharply and strong price momentum, which should account for half the company's organic growth this year. Taking into account its merger with Chr. Hansen, the company aims to double its sales by 2030.
