Asset management strategy

The OFI Invest Energy Strategic Metals fund ended August down 3.55%.

While central banks last month appeared to suggest that the monetary tightening cycle could be coming to an end due to the slowdown in inflation and certain economic indicators, both Jerome Powell (US Federal Reserve) and Christine Lagarde (European Central Bank) reiterated that inflation had still not returned to its target level. In so doing, they hinted that monetary tightening might continue, for the time being remaining resolutely committed to their target of bringing inflation back to around 2%. This adversely affected precious metal prices.

In China, after proactive comments from local authorities at last month's Politburo meeting, a series of sluggish economic indicators (manufacturing PMI, imports/exports, etc.) and the difficulties of the real estate sector, symbolised by property developer Country Garden's cash flow problems, dampened hopes of a rapid recovery in the Chinese economy and dragged down industrial metals, which, with the notable exception of lead, fell by between 4% and 9%. With investors beginning to lose patience at the lack of specific support for the real estate sector, measures were announced at the end of the month (interest rate cuts, easing of purchase restrictions, etc.) that should at least stabilise the situation.

Meanwhile, sectors linked to energy transition continued to fuel a sharp increase in demand. Demand for copper linked to electric vehicles and renewables has risen 74% in the year to date in China, more than making up for the decline related to the real estate sector. At the same time, Chilean copper production remains sluggish: with production expected to come in at 1.35 million metric tons this year, down from 1.73 million two years ago, the country's leading producer, Codelco, has appointed a new CEO to try to steady the ship. In this environment, reserves are still relatively low.

Metal prices have fallen this year as a result of the sluggish Chinese economy and highly restrictive monetary policies. With both these factors seemingly set to reverse course in the fairly near future, current price levels could constitute a medium-term investment opportunity, especially with demand associated with the energy transition also quickening.
