Asset management strategy

The fund posted a performance of 0,99% versus 1.13% for its benchmark. This underperformance is mainly explained by the portfolio's hedge via the Crossover, which cost 13 bps in relative performance, as well as by an underweight in the automotive sector (Faurecia and Antolin), which negatively impacted performance by a further 13 bps. However, some bets proved beneficial, particularly services (+8 bps in relative performance) with Paprec and Appark, as well as telecoms (+4 bps in relative performance) thanks to the lack of exposure to Altice International. The fund participated with a selection in the primary market (Levi's, Nissan, Boot's) and reduced its exposure to French issuers in anticipation of a complicated autumn in France, both politically and fiscally.

While tariffs remain a drag on economic activity, financial markets are primarily concerned about uncertainty. This is why the initial trade agreements were well received, as they provided businesses with greater visibility. In this context, the European high yield market tightened by 40 bps, the second-strongest of the year, driven by a sharp spread compression in the B and CCC segments, resulting in a massive inflow into the asset class. Performances by rating confirmed this trend: +0.5% for BBs, +0.6% for single Bs and +0.9% for CCCs. The best performing sectors were automotive (1.2%) and retail (+1.8%), while the worst performers were basic materials (+0.43%) and media (+0.5%). In the primary market, July was less active than the exceptional previous month, but remains well above the average of the last five years. Initial earnings results from high-yield companies, often released slightly later than those of equity markets, are generally solid, with outlooks that remain positive. The impact of tariffs appears to be contained for the time being.

As expected, the ECB kept its rates unchanged (at 2%) and maintained a wait-and-see stance, judging its monetary policy to be well calibrated. Christine Lagarde emphasised that further rate cuts would only be considered in the event of a significant deterioration in economic indicators.

Meanwhile, Donald Trump launched a flurry of trade offensives on tariffs, ultimately securing agreements with Japan and Europe. However, negotiations with China are still ongoing. He also took aim at the Federal Reserve, accusing Jerome Powell of holding back growth with excessively high interest rates, even going so far as to stage a surprise visit to the institution's headquarters. Despite these attacks, the Federal Reserve held rates steady, arguing that economic conditions did not yet warrant further easing, although two committee members dissented. Jerome Powell described the policy stance as "moderately restrictive", pushing back expectations of imminent rate cuts.
